

COMAP INTRODUCES SAFEGUARD FLEXIBLE HOSES

Comap Westco, the leading manufacturer and supplier of heating and plumbing equipment, has extended its range of flexi tap connectors to include options to suit every project. The company has also introduced a Safeguard label that applies to all WRAS approved tap connectors and other accredited products across its range.

Taking the guesswork out of the correct product to use for various installations, each of Comap's 20 Safeguard flexi tap connectors features a black line running through them as a quick, visual indicator. So, when working on projects for potable water, installers simply have to reach for the hose with the black line to ensure that they adhere to regulatory guidelines.

In addition to the Safeguard range, Comap stocks a wide selection of stainless steel braided flexible tap connectors with EPDM lining for general use. The range includes a number of different connection solutions, including pushfit and various lengths, offering the right product for every situation, even when space is tight.

Chris Ramster, Product Strategy Director, said: "We aim to make life as easy as possible for installers and so we've created a range of hoses to suit every situation. We've had excellent feedback, as it's simple to identify which product to use, with the minimum of hassle."

Comap Westco's full range features over 5,500 products, from heating valves to innovative fittings systems and everything in between.

October 2007

-Ends-